Chapter 1 by Gounaitory

We all know such a Story Wars author intellikat , who is always on top. But that's really good-- I have read his drafts and chapters,they are very rich with words and expressions. And I am happy that a person devoted himself to this site,to his writing, because I write too. And I really wish you to have your Pulitzer Prize.

But it really becomes annoying with accusing me in multiple accounts or whatever and telling me that my chapters are insane. I just write and other authors vote on my chapters. I might have spelling ,punctuation mistakes (but I believe I have them very few), because English is not my native language. A lot of authors here are not native in English.
Moreover you are emphasizing "David Gounaitory" and "Knucklepants Diego" in most of your drafts and making fun of it. Really, no need to do it, cuz it's childish and I believe you are a big boy. Sounds like, we are in high school you are bullying us here, lol.

I might accuse you on point hack, for example, because you got enormous amount of points here. Authors, with better writings (Luke Meyers, Lance Felix, etc.) got less points than you and that's really strange.

Best regards,

Gounaitory

Chapter 2 by Luke Meyers

Well said, Gounaitory. Story Wars should be inclusive and welcoming above all, so that everyone feels welcome to participate and develop their creative talents regardless of current skill level or language mastery. Native English speakers such as myself should be grateful to those who have taken the time to learn our language in addition to their own. Teasing kids or those with technical imperfections (or even poorly thought out content) is really not constructive, even if intended in fun. I'd rather see this site blossom as a supportive and compassionate community where we build each other up.

To be fair, I'm pretty sure intellikat just considers it all funny, and doesn't intend to be mean. intellikat, you're one of the stronger writers here; please treat this as a gentle reminder that your talents would be more helpfully applied in setting a good example and elevating our mutual discourse.

Boy, this site really needs a forum (I know, it's coming)! The increasing trend of stories as message threads is amusing, but impractical.

Chapter 3 by intellikat

Boys and girls:

1) No rules have been broken by Intellikat.
2) Your perceptions of what a writer is intending or meaning are not necessarily true; no need to label a writer based on your assumptions on his/her personal character.
3) Your chapter does not equal your self-worth; lighten up on both the ego and the pity.
4) When you voluntarily put your own writing into a public space, it is bound to receive criticism. However, criticism does not equal a hostile or unwelcoming environment. Effective age, language-ability, content, private work groups, etc. has been offered (by me) to allow users to have some control over the public or private nature of stories. At present, it is all open, welcoming, and inclusive. If you think that a creator God sees homosexuality as a sin, and you want to limit the civil liberties of homosexuals in your country, don't confuse your personal beliefs and preferences with a universal morality or system of ethics that everyone should adopt. Right now, your criticisms of Intellikat are appealing to some unspoken, certainly unwritten, universal idea of how YOU think users should write on this site.

6) Just write stories!
